8.4 Summary for Incoming Managers

Table 17: Summary for Incoming PMP Managers: Political Regime Outlook 2025–2027

Dimension	Current State (2025–26)	Post-Midterm Scenario
Political	R Unified (Trump, R Congress)	R Pres / D House if Dems flip (Nov 2026)
Macro Regime	Overheating / Goldilocks	Monitor inflation + growth slowdown signals
Fed Policy	Cutting/Flat cycle	Dependent on inflation path
Key Risk 1	Tariff escalation (trade war)	Gridlock may moderate tariff extremes
Key Risk 2	Fiscal stimulus reversal	D House = spending cuts, deficit pressure
Clean Energy	Rollback of IRA provisions	D House may defend IRA = tailwind for portfolio
EM / Trade	EM under tariff pressure	Divided govt historically less aggressive on trade
Monitoring	House generic ballot polls	Watch Oct 2026 polling for regime shift signal

8.4.1 Key Takeaways

Based on the historical analysis (1990–2025):

1. Presidential puzzle confirmed: Democratic presidencies deliver ~10pp higher annualised returns on average across global country ETFs — consistent with Santa-Clara & Valkanov (2003) and Pastor & Veronesi (2017).
2. Divided government is not necessarily bad: R President with Democrat House historically shows less aggressive policy (gridlock effect), which has mixed but often less negative market impact than feared. EM and clean energy assets tend to benefit from reduced tariff/regulatory uncertainty.
3. Current portfolio sensitivities: The two most politically sensitive positions are Invesco Wind Energy and Cadeler A/S (clean energy), which face headwinds under unified Republican government but would benefit from a Democrat-controlled House defending the Inflation Reduction Act.
4. 2026 midterm baseline: History shows that the president’s party typically loses House seats in midterms. With current Polymarket probabilities suggesting a competitive 2026 race, a transition to “R Pres / D House” is the central risk scenario for the portfolio.
5. Recommended monitoring framework: Track (1) monthly CPI vs Fed path for macro regime signals, (2) generic Congressional ballot polling (RealClearPolitics average), (3) Polymarket House control contract as leading indicator.
